Market Commentary

February saw stronger-than-expected economic data, with service sector activity expanding at an accelerating pace across all regions, and the Atlanta Fed's GDP Nowcast suggesting the US economy will grow at an annualised pace of 2.3%. There is some evidence that cost pressures are resurfacing. Surveys were quite ambiguous on the subject (some hot, others cooling) but provisional inflation data from France, Germany, Spain and the wider eurozone told a consistent tale: prices rose surprisingly fast during February.

Stronger growth and employment figures suggest that central banks will have to hike interest rates further than previously expected in an effort to tame inflation. This shift in sentiment put pressure on bond, property and equity prices through the month. Domestically, we saw hopes that the Northern Ireland Protocol could be sealed after talks between the government and the EU. Those lofty ambitions, however, soon dissipated as it became clear the government was disunited once more on its position with Europe.

February also marked the one-year anniversary of Russia's invasion of Ukraine. The conflict has been a tragic negative-sum game and has contributed to high inflation both inside and outside Russia.

In Japan, prime minister Fumio Kishida will nominate Kazuo Ueda to take on the governorship of the Bank of Japan when Haruhiko Kuroda retires in April. This was a surprise and was viewed as a relatively hawkish appointment compared to Masayoshi Amamiya, who was seen as the continuity candidate.
