Market Commentary

Inflation continues to rise in many regions, forcing central banks to raise interest rates. During the month, the US central bank raised the fed funds rate by 75 basis points, its largest hike for 28 years. A continued strong dollar and policy tightening should help to get inflation back to the Fed's 2% target. How aggressive the Fed will have to become will be influenced by variables linked with the supply side of the economy: energy, food, the potential for continued manufacturing bottlenecks, and labour supply. Although uncertainty is high, there are reasons to be cautiously optimistic on all four areas.

Government bonds were negatively hit as markets moved to price in further increases in interest rates. There are fears that aggressive rate hikes could spark a recession.

Equities also struggled over the month, although China remains a relatively bright spot. The Chinese economy continues to grow despite recent challenges. The Chinese Communist Party has moved beyond last year's market-unfriendly rhetoric and is seeking to stimulate the economy further.

Invesco Asian was a positive contributor and outperformed its benchmark over the month.
