Market Commentary

The main news in May was the back-and-forth discussion on raising the US Federal debt ceiling. Following the usual script, a last-minute deal was agreed suspending the limit until 1 January 2025. The spending cut is relatively modest in real terms, resulting in less economic impact than anticipated and triggering a small rally in markets.

Technology stocks continued their rapid ascent, powered by lofty expectations of a productivity boom on the back of artificial intelligence and future automation. This was encouraged by particularly strong earnings for Nvidia as demand for its chips skyrocketed.

Domestically, we saw the coronation of a new king and the 12th consecutive interest rate rise from the Bank of England to bring the base rate up to 4.5%. While inflation fell below 10%, it did not decline as much as had been expected. The market is currently anticipating that rates will rise by a full percentage point, peaking at 5.5% at the end of 2023.

Turning to China, economic data was generally underwhelming relative to expectations. The Hang Seng China Enterprise index entered bear market territory, while the domestic Chinese equity benchmark CSI 300 index wiped out its year-to-date gains. There are reports the Chinese government is working on a new basket of measures to support the property market, but no details have been released yet.
