Asset Allocation

Market Commentary

Equities continued to rebound in November, spurred in part by the softening of China's zero-Covid stance. Markets were also helped by the US Federal Reserve acknowledging smaller interest rate increases ahead. UK government bonds have stabilised and no longer offer the value they did following the ill-fated mini-budget.

The US economy continues to expand on the back of solid job growth. But the Fed has made it clear that it would rather subject the economy to near-term economic pain than risk not getting inflation back under control. Some forecasters have upgraded the chances of a 'soft landing', in which inflation eases after a period of interest rate increases without the economy sliding into a recession. The slightly increased chance of a soft landing helped to boost stocks and bonds, although a recession next year remains likely.

China's efforts to restrain the spread of Covid have been a major dampening force for growth this year, but there has been some easing of the policy recently following a statement from the new politburo.

The economic slowdown in China, and the impending slowdown elsewhere, has been enough to force the oil price into retreat. This is particularly helpful to Europeans and frustrating to Vladimir Putin's plans to exert pressure on the West by restricting gas supplies.

The Asset Allocation Committee voted to increase the allocation to US equities due to the higher exposure to growth stocks and to decrease the allocation to Asia in light of Xi Jinping's tightening grip on power.

Lumyna BofA Commodity Alpha fund within the MISM Alternative strategy was a positive contributor to returns.
