Asset Allocation

Market Commentary

Equity markets rose in most developed regions in October, despite the Federal Reserve confirming that tighter monetary policy is still needed to contain inflation. Chinese equities were weak, however, largely due to the Communist Party congress cementing president Xi's unchallenged authority. There was also no signalled easing of the region's zero-Covid policy, raising uncertainty regarding the outlook for corporate profits. The European Central Bank raised interest rates by a further 75 basis points, but believes substantial progress has already been made in the fight against inflation.

Rishi Sunak replaced Liz Truss as UK prime minister. Markets responded favourably because of Sunak's reputation as a financially conservative and market-savvy heavyweight. Yields on UK government bonds have decreased significantly across all maturities and are now lower than they were prior to the mini-budget. Markets currently anticipate UK interest rates to peak at below 5% in 2023.

The UK's financial future is uncertain, but the worst of the sterling and gilt volatility will have passed if inflation does moderate next year and UK credibility is restored. Mortgage rates will probably decrease again as short-term yields decline, which will relieve homeowners to some extent. We still believe the UK will go through a mild recession rather than a severe one.

Last month, the Asset Allocation Committee voted to reduce absolute return and cash in favour of UK gilts and inflation-linked bonds.

Schroder European Recovery fund was a standout performer over the month
